The Art of Medicine in Ancient Egypt: What Do You Do Before You Become A Mummy?

Sunday, November 6, 2005

Metropolitan Museum, New York

Time: 1:00-5:00

Contact Hours: 4

Cost: $40 for professional development credit

The causes of illnesses were little understood in ancient Egypt, and their prevention and cure was a major concern for most Egyptians — one that informs much of ancient Egyptian art but has received relatively little attention.

Learn about the medical knowledge and practices of ancient Egyptians, their expression in the art produced, and the role played by magic.

Tour the New Exhibit featured in the New York Times Sept. 10

Lecture: James Allen, curator, Egyptian Art, Metropolitan Museum — “The Art of Medicine in Ancient Egypt”

Film: “Papyrus” Shows how the papyrus plant grows, is harvested, and used for paper, baskets, and other objects.

Lecture: Robert K. Ritner, professor of Egyptology, University of Chicago — “Magic within the Medical Practices of Ancient Egypt” .

Registration Cutoff Date: October 24

This program may be combined with other IHARE programs for teachers who need additional contact hours.
